Sexual harassment, mobbing, and any other form of discrimination, constitute a serious attack on a person’s dignity and can damage the victim’s psychological and physical health.

The victims of workplace harassment often feel insecure at the place of work or study, are absent more frequently and may even become unable to work or study.

Overall, in addition to the distress it causes to victims, workplace harassment can affect other colleagues, social relations, and the quality of the workplace itself.

Prominent research shows that harassment is more widespread than commonly believed, and significantly underreported.

If you are currently experiencing, or have experienced, mobbing or any other form of discrimination or harassment, you are not alone! Silence is their strength, together we are stronger!
